Rob Omer named Chief Probation Officer in the 7th Judicial District

MONTROSE – The Seventh Judicial District recently announced that Rob Omer has been named the district’s new Chief Probation Officer. Omer takes over for current Chief Probation Officer Carrol Warner who will retire from the Probation Department on Jan. 31, 2012, after more than 16 years of service.

“We are very excited to have Rob take on this new role,” said Seventh Judicial District Chief Judge J. Steven Patrick “I am confident that his past experience and commitment to this community will serve the people of the Seventh Judicial District well.”

Chief Judge Patrick also wished Warner well in her retirement.

“Carrol has served as a leader in our probation department for more than 16 years,” he said. “Her contributions to our programs were vast and she will be missed.”

Omer has been with the Seventh Judicial District for the past 5 years and has worked in the field of probation as a federal probation officer and probation and parole officer for the State of Virginia. Prior to entering his career with the Colorado Judicial Department, he was the executive director for Alternative Youth Adventures, an organization specializing in youth wilderness therapy.

The Seventh Judicial District covers Delta, Gunnison, Hinsdale, Montrose, Ouray and San Miguel counties.
