Second Judicial District preparing for move to new Denver Justice Center Move scheduled for late June, new courtrooms assigned

DENVER – Beginning in July, the Denver City and County Building will no longer house courtrooms handling felony criminal matters, drug court, and juvenile matters. Such cases instead will be heard in the new Lindsey-Flanigan Courthouse, located two blocks to the west of the City and County Building at 520 W. Colfax Avenue.

“We are very pleased to be making the move to the new courthouse,” said Second Judicial District Chief Judge Robert S. Hyatt. “The Lindsey-Flanigan complex stands as a modern symbol of the rule of law with its safety features and technological capabilities helping to ensure effective and efficient administration of justice.”

Parties to cases and anybody else having business with the Second Judicial District’s juvenile court, felony criminal court and Drug Court will need to report to the new building beginning in July. Those summoned for jury service in Denver District Court will have to read their summonses closely to determine whether to report to the Lindsey-Flanigan Courthouse or the City and County Building, where civil matters filed in the 2nd Judicial District will continue to be heard.

Criminal courts in the City and County Building will cease most business on Monday, June 28, and resume work in the new courthouse the following week. During that time, Denver County Judge Andrew Armatas will continue to hear criminal cases as necessary, while Denver District Court Chief Judge Hyatt will handle a criminal docket in the City and County Building and hear emergency matters. Similarly, the Juvenile Court will close for business during that week, with provisions made by Chief Judge Karen M. Ashby to handle emergency matters as they arise.
